Romania, aggressive economical and cultural attitude-paradigm in the national security strategy.

Between all the elements and the processes, which define the strategy of the national security, we find also the expression "...the respect of basic interests of Romania" Romania is a country which developed a unique experience in the European modern history.

The critical moments of our history demonstrated that Rumanian people can organise better and can surpasses all the problems by changing his attitude, and can reach great successes.

Question is: which means we can use to develop our nation?

Our legendary specific feature of peaceful nation must be reevaluated and replaced with an aggressive attitude in our cultural and economic activities (actions). This process of changing attitude we must be reflected also in our national strategy of security.

The ways to obtain that are a persistent (consequent) education and rapid mode of organization in the international economical and cultural (connection) relationships with the other countries from the world.

Romania must open many cultural and economical centres in the most important cities of the world, and priority are those countries which had in the past any kind of relationships (like Arabian countries, China, Vietnam, by their ex-students or businessman; some African countries and of course all Latin countries).

This kind of actions will increase the Rumanian influence in the globalization process.

Every ex-student of Arabian or African countries is a good interface between Romania and their countries, an open window to business opportunities or cultural events.

This actions and another similar will and must conquer again the commercial markets that we loose after 1989. Obvious, this changing process will need a support of a new vision in the national strategy of security. This process, follow the American type of strategy in security which is based on the concept of defence outside the American territory.

Our country will be more stabile and will offers to its citizens a better life based on the principle: "a better government is essentially to assure the national security".

I consider that is a good paradigm in this actual world context. For changing, people's attitude, is necessary a very (extremely) hard work, complex and of long standing. This approach is based on an unfailing premise: the success. Having some immediate successes by using an efficacious organization, may be that positive shock which will give new perspective to our people. We are speaking here of revaluation, with implication in our present and future life. This directly implications are: economic welfare (including for our partners), stability, international recognition, more influence in global decisions, another level in national security.

Romania is a big system in a continue change. All countries have a dynamic of changing and adjustment of the new technology, new games for power. In this general change is important for us to be assimilated with "the ones which are building". We observe there are nations which use their advantages like: demographic rise, natural resources, geostrategycal position, to occupy important places in globalisation decisions.

There are countries without important resources, without strategycal positions, but with an attitude and actions witch make them to be important actors in the political world secure (ex: Holland). We are now at a point from where we have to reorientate our national security strategy for making high dimensions actions. So, we are investing now a few of our "security energy" to obtain great benefits in the future. We will solve the binominal of Rumanians implications in global activities: national-global binominal.

By global actions we can consolidate our state to be a guarantee of the stability and continuity on Terra, now in the 21-ist century.

It's important to us because new ways be open in front of Romanian nation. After many years Rumanian people will be priced at his real value and will be part of the powerful nations. All the great nations is the one who expands outside its border to offer the others civilization and progress.
